

The Courageous Woman Who Took on Kinsey, Playboy and Big Porn

By Robert Knight and Regina Griggs

As the world awakens from a long, pandemic-marred winter into the promise of spring, PFOX has lost a dear friend and champion of children.

Dr. Judith Reisman passed away on April 9, a few days shy of her 86th birthday. This fearless woman exposed legendary sex researcher Alfred C. Kinsey as a predatory fraud in her 1990 book with Ed Eichel, "Kinsey, Sex and Fraud," and compiled a study showing how Playboy, Penthouse and Hustler magazines had frequently used child porn imagery

Her tireless work exposing the porn mags ignited an anti-pornography movement that led to President Reagan announcing the launch in May 1985 of what became known as the Meese Commission on Pornography. The ensuing report was well done, but it was viciously assailed by a professional PR firm hired by the smut kings.

We're only now seeing the science emerge that shows porn is as addictive as drugs. Judith coined the term "erototoxins" to explain how exposure affects the brain. The same dynamic is at play during premature sexual activity, which is why so many people mistakenly believe they were "born gay" even years after a same-sex encounter at a young age.

Judith was a friend and collaborator, and a supporter of the ex-gay movement.

She starred in the 1995 Family Research Council video exposing Kinsey entitled "The Children of Table 34." Based on her research, the documentary refers to shocking graph tables about sexual abuse committed on 317 boys as young as two months and up to 15 years old.

The information purportedly came from pedophiles solicited by Kinsey, who included the “research” in his opus, “Sexual Behavior in the Human Male” (1948). After the book release, the media fawned over Kinsey while ignoring his obscene experiments on children.

Kinsey’s male book and a female volume in 1953 became the “scientific” foundation for the sexual revolution. Its wreckage – broken families, millions of abortions, millions of annual new cases of STDs and a flood of pornography, obscenity and sexual dysfunction – is all around us. Hugh Hefner’s first Playboy Philosophy essay cited Kinsey as gospel, and he credited the “Kinsey Report” with converting him from his strict Methodist upbringing to becoming an apostle for “free sex,” from which he made millions.

Because of Kinsey, people have been recast as “sexual beings” instead of human beings with a moral compass. He pushed the lie that sex has no moral implications whatever – even sex with animals – and that children enjoy sex and should be groomed early. This is the animating principle behind most “comprehensive” sex education to this day, beginning in kindergarten.

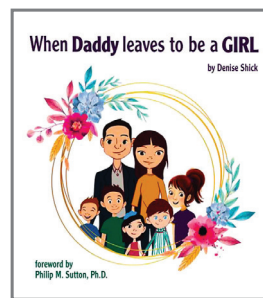

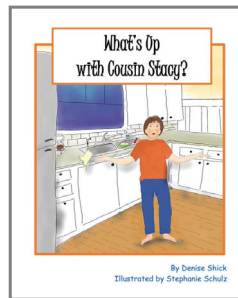

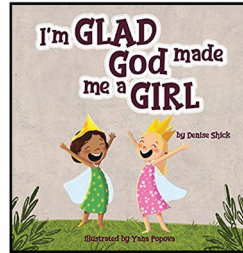

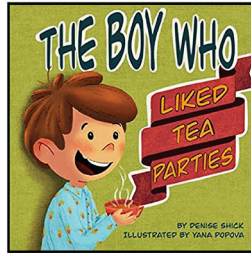

Judith showed how Planned Parenthood executives worked with Kinsey to rewire the public’s views on sex through the Sexuality Information and Education Council (SIECUS) and other Kinsey acolytes.

The ACLU used Kinsey’s “research” to rewrite the Model Penal Code, which led to relaxed penalties for criminal sex offenses, including rape and child sex abuse. Judith’s book, “Kinsey: Crimes and Consequences” (2000), documents how they did it.

The assertion by Kinsey, who was secretly gay himself, that 10 percent of American males were homosexual for at least three years, was the source of the false claim by LGBT activists that 10 percent of the population was gay, when it was under 2 percent. Recent surveys show a shocking increase in LGBTQ identification among the young after years of nonstop propaganda. We shouldn’t be surprised.

For her courageous work, Judith endured the scorn of the media, academia and even conservatives who were afraid of guilt by association. To Liberty University’s credit, she became a visiting professor at the School of Law and then a research professor in psychology in the School of Behavioral Sciences.

Judith was a “red diaper baby,” born to communist parents. But, like many former leftists, she became the leftists’ worst nightmare. She knew exactly what they were up to and told the world.

A Jewish woman, she reportedly accepted Jesus Christ as her savior several years ago. She long encouraged Christians and Jews to work together against the growing, anti-God darkness and immorality.

Someday, Judith may get her due on earth for her pioneering work. But we’ve reason to believe she’s enjoying something far, far better in a far, far better place.

A Welcome Addition to Children’s Literature

For parents dealing with gender confusion, PFOX board member Denise Shick, founder of Help4Families.org, has written a quality children’s series of four sensitive, age-appropriate books.

In “I’m Glad God Made Me a Girl,” illustrated by Yana Popova, sensitive parents gently guide their confused daughter and her masculine-inclined girlfriend toward being comfortable with their own biological reality.

Similarly, in “The Boy Who Liked Tea Parties,” also illustrated by Popova, Shick shows how a supportive father makes a huge difference in elevating a boy’s self-esteem.

Drawing from her own painful experience of seeing her own father identify as a woman, Shick’s “When Daddy Leaves to Be a Girl” (illustrated by Popova and Julie Howard) teaches kids not to blame themselves for their parents’ problems.

Finally, in “What’s Up with Cousin Stacy?” (illustrated by Stephanie Schulz), parents deal with their child’s reaction to the “coming out” of an older relative and how they can love her while confirming God’s design for human sexuality.

These books aren’t for all children, who deserve to have their innocence protected as long as possible. But they are wonderful aids to help children threatened by sexual dynamics beyond their control.

They can be obtained at: www.help4families.org/amazon-resources.

Thanks for your continued support of PFOX and may God bless you.
